

Before You Buy Hash Power

Six things to understand before you become a miner

CHECKLIST / THE PURCHASE & THE RISKS

1 / 2

☐

01 Understand the risks. Set your limit.

Mining is highly speculative. Coin prices and mining output can fall, and you could lose everything you spend. Never spend more than you're comfortable losing—ever. Keep money for bills, emergencies, and everyday life out of it.

☐

02 Understand active participation.

You're buying hash power: computing capacity that contributes to a mining network—not ownership of our business. Take an active role: learn how mining works, follow your network, check your allocations, and protect your wallet. Helping grow the community is optional, not a requirement to receive mining allocations.

☐

03 Understand daily mining rewards—and why they can shrink.

Mining allocations are distributed daily from the coin actually mined. Your allocation depends on your hash power relative to the network's total participating hash power. If that total grows while yours stays the same, your portion gets smaller. Buying more hash power does not guarantee a larger allocation or a profit; mining output changes too.

Tick each box only when you understand it. If something is unclear, pause and ask.

CHECKLIST / THE PLAN & THE PEOPLE

2 / 2

04 Understand the LevelUP compensation plan.

LevelUP rewards qualifying referral activity that helps grow the community. Learn the qualifications, limits, and payout choices before you participate. Mining allocations and referral commissions are different things. Buying hash power does not promise commissions, and you don't have to recruit to receive mining allocations.

05 Understand our background—including the legal trouble.

Know who you're buying from. Read about our history, the founder's 2013 Mulligan Mint bankruptcy, and the Texas regulatory proceeding involving TEXTcoin, MineTxC, Blockchain Mint, and Robert J. Gray. Read the filings and our response, ask hard questions, and make your own decision. Don't skip the uncomfortable parts.

06 Understand the mission—and separate the plan from a promise.

Our mission is to spread peace and prosperity through honest money. We have a plan to build useful networks and a stronger community—but a plan is not proof of future success. The mission may resonate with you; participation still carries real financial risk. There is no promise of profit or wealth.

Understand it. Question it. Decide without pressure.
